"Having used your Paine's Celery Compound this spring, I can safely recommend it as the most powerful and at the same time the most gentle regulator. It is a splendid nerve tonic, and since taking it I have felt like a new man."

Mrs. Potter as Cleopatra.

A letter from Washington to the Remond Times says: "Mrs. James Brown Potter has been the sensation of the week. As an actress she has created as much consternation in the dramatic field as Amelie Rives has in the field of erratic literature. Her role was that of Cleopatra. Her appearance here was of peculiar interest to Washington society, from the fact that to Mrs. Secretary Whitney is due the credit (if there is any credit in it) of discovering her in the reading of 'Ostler Joe' at her residence two winters ago. The subject of her reading at that time set society afire and first called public attention to Mrs. Potter. She was a woman rather fair to look upon, stage-struck, and fond of notoriety, and immediately became imbued with the idea that a great future lay before her. Washington society was therefore on the qui vive to witness her much-talked-of rendition of the Queen of the Nile. As a spectacular drama it must be admitted that the play was a great success. The magnificence of Rome, the blue Italian sky, the Parthenon, the watanese and abandon of the Egyptian civilization, the gorgeous fascination of the indolent love breathing court of Cleopatra, which had degraded kings and had drawn into the whirlpool of ruin one who might have been the master of the world—in all this the play was a success. But Mrs. Potter, as the voluptuous, pulsing, hungry, Isian Nile beauty was a complete and total failure. In the scene in which she first made her appearance sailing down the Nile, lying back in her voluptuously cushioned gondola, fanned by great ostrich feathers, entertained with the ether and the bandolier, the audience was in the height of expectation—the great denouement was about to take place. The woman who had dared to defy public opinion and make the drama intensely realistic was about to appear. In this scene, however, Mrs. Potter's ideas were peculiarly her own. She did not come down the Nile, as Cleopatra did, nineteen centuries ago, beautiful only in her charms which nature had given her, but she glittered with diamonds and precious jewels, her head was encased in the scaly armour of the serpent of the Nile, and her limbs were shrouded in a diaphanous material, which attracted, because it only half revealed and half concealed the charms beneath. The audience heaved a sigh of relief, she was not as bad as she had been painted, and really there seemed to be a tinge of disappointment. Then Mrs. Potter began to act. She has no more declamation than a school girl, and it is supplemented by an angularity of body which no more suggests the ideal Oriental beauty than the manikin suggests the man. She is so awkward that she would fall down standing still. The audience grew restless and awaited with impatience, when she was to make her revelations above the belt. The crisis came. Mrs. Potter heroically bared her bosom to give the asp a chance, but alas, no immediacy of dress could render Mrs. Potter voluptuous in the sense that Cleopatra was. When the play was over the audience dispersed, feeling that realism on the stage was not a success, especially with Mrs. Potter in the principal role.

The Canvass.

I merely wish to say That in April we have May,
Who leads a host of friends all forlorn.
We have lovers of lamb,
Who will work to Down-ham,
Or descendants of the noted swine-born.

He will win our applause Who draws the longest straw In this lottery of "bolts," "yon know"; We'll have no "blocks of live"
Where the Lead-beaters thrive,
And where liver pills and wormifuge grow.

Our friend John will sit down With the boys around town,
And tell them how he loves them one and all.
For their luncheon he'll partake, Just for old friendship's sake,
And may be, then, he'll make a little call.

As we read Mr. Hawkes' testimonials from Governors, Senators, Legislators, men of science and distinguished citizens throughout the United States, who testified to having had their eyes improved, and sometimes restored, by the use of his celebrated glasses, we realize that a glass that will reflect such brilliancy of light as to enable the wearer to see as in youth, and to read by candle or other artificial light, surely is to be desired by all spectacle wearers.
